

Soluteo one of the first to explore the capacity of MDS version 4.1 technology

May 16, 2005 - Soluteo is pleased to announce it is one of the first companies to test the capacity of the new Mobile Data System™ (MDS version 4.1) technology developed by manufacturer Research In Motion. Soluteo's Director, Sigisbert Ratier, believes this underlines the close relationship between his company and the makers of the BlackBerry® given that the new MDS technology, previewed in Orlando in April, is not yet on the market.

"The beta version we are using enables customers to design their own mobile applications to suit their specific needs, which our team can then render operational," explains Mr. Ratier. This simplifies and shortens the application personalization phase, greatly reducing development costs.

Mr. Ratier points out that, as well as the economic benefits, the new MDS technology permits better integration of a client's own expertise with Soluteo's mobile experience. "Our clients are the experts in their particular field. By developing their own mobile application interfaces, they can ensure the solution fits their needs perfectly," adds the Soluteo Director.

Clearly the reduced development costs and more refined personalizing of applications should allow more businesses to extend their enterprise software solutions to BlackBerry® mobile terminals.
