

SOLUTEO CONSOLIDATES ITS GROWTH

Montreal-based company Soluteo continues the steady growth it has enjoyed in recent years. President Sigisbert Ratier has taken advantage of this success to strengthen the organization's executive management.

Raphaël Steinman becomes Senior Vice-President of the company. In this new role, Mr. Steinman will continue to supervise the technological initiatives of the firm he founded with Sigisbert Ratier in 2001 while playing an active part in reconfiguring Soluteo's offering to North American markets.

Eric Barbeau is now a member of the company's executive board, having been promoted to Vice-President. As chief sales officer, he will spearhead Soluteo's growth phase in the United States and Canada. Among other responsibilities, Mr. Barbeau will be in charge of setting up a world-class sales force in 2012 and strengthening Soluteo's presence in key economic sectors, both in Canada and the United States. Mr. Barbeau joined Soluteo in August 2010 as manager of business development.

This fall, Soluteo will be celebrating its 10th anniversary. The private firm founded by Sigisbert Ratier and Raphaël Steinman has become a leader in mobilizing business processes on mobile platforms. Soluteo's team of engineers has acquired solid expertise with BlackBerry and has successfully delivered many large-scale projects in record turnaround times for flagships of the Canadian economy, including Videotron, CBC, PR-Maintenance, and Via Rail.

Soluteo has been an accredited member of Research In Motion's network of independent software vendors (ISV) since 2002. The company's head office is located in Old Montreal, at the heart of the city's technology district, and its staff consists of over fifteen highly specialized employees.
